A Scrimmage with a Tiger. Early one morning last February

as I sat in my veranda at early tea, I received a hasty note from my friend Captain H., intimating that looking up the tiger, and gave me mark of the Keystone Watch due notice, in case I wished to share Case Company, of Philadelphia, the fun.

off, and dispatched my servants, 1500 employees, capacity 2000 with a small battery of breech and cases daily. Its products are barrel loaders, to H's bungalow, sold by all jewelers. It makes waiting his arrival with what pa- the celebrated Jas. Boss Filled tience I might. By ten o'clock he Watch Cases, now fitted with rode up, bringing a camel for my the only bow (ring) which canuse; and the elephants and beaters not be pulled off the case—the having gone on ahead, we cantered on leisurely.

An hour's easy riding brought as to the rendezvous, where a pretty exciting scene greeted us. Under the mango trees were grouped about eighty-six beaters, elephants, Sowars belonging to H.'s regiment, and volunteers from the village, all eager for the work, and breathing out death and distruction to the tiger, which they affirmed to be one I had followed and lost two used 40 years and always affords relief years ago. After some talk and difference of opinion as to the best way of working the jungle, H. and started on foot for the "mool" where we arranged to post ourselves, as the likeliest place for the tiger breaking cover.

I clambered up one tree, and H. another, and when conveneintly seated, sent back word for the beaters to commence proceedings, which they speedily did in their useful fashion, kicking up noise enough to rouse the names of every defunct cow in the district. Shouting, beating tom-toms, blowing horns, and in short, making such a hullabaloo as only natives can make, and which was calculated to drive even a tiger from its lair, is strangely exciting. Sometimes, if a jungle is a little open the tiger can be seen for a considerable time before coming within shot; and then, as with straining eyes you watch FRUITS, his stealthily, cat-like creep, how the nerves tingle, and what speculation as to whether the first chance will be yours crowd on the brain. Our first "draw" was a blank, so ve held counsel with our ally, the village kakoor, as to the next move, and finally elected to try another patch at the jungle. H. and I scrambled to our new trees, and I was busily employed lighting my pipe, when I heard a Everything Best Quality whisper below me, and looking down, descried H. gesticulating violently. Slipping down, I heard: 🔲 "Look sharp, the tiger's afoot; we must get back."

Back we went, scrambling into the best trees we could find; mine was a miserable sapling, the effort Choice, Fresh to perch on which gave me cramp, and nearly upset me in more ways than one.

Bang, jingle, roar, shriek, went the beaters; and then I forgot my misery. Suddenly I heard the firing of a rifle-shot, followed by a low whistle, the signal that the tiger was hit.

Down H. and I jumped, making for the elephant to follow up the wounded animal. But the first shot, fired by one of the Sowars had been mortal, and so, having Port Huron Marble Works put a couple of barrels into her to make certain, we lugged a fine full grown tigress out of the scrub. This was not bad. But we knew the male was near somewhere, so another beat was arranged; and the coolies had searcely cleared their throats, when out bounded a splendid tiger.

H. had the first chance, but could not get a shot; and before the brute was within any range a Sowar fired a snap shot that hit him bard, though too far back to be fatal. He was then just under my tree, and the challenge he roared back actually seemed to shake me; on he crashed through the bushes, disappearing from our sight.

Stealthily descending, we gave him time to lie down, and then mounting the elephants, followed

My luck was in the ascendant now, as before we had gone a couple of hundred yards, I caught sight of the tiger crouching under the thick foliage of a corrunchur bush. Pointing him out to H., I fired right and left, and as he made no FARMING off, but H. thinking not, and that he was only sulking, gave him an In Alpena and Alcona Counties, ounce ball with one of Jacob's shells; the effect was startling, to say the least of it; with a roar like $2.00 to $5.00 per acre.
